THE JOURNEY TO AORAKI-MOUNT COOK is a rollicking read that will take you from Tibet to Antarctica; to Nepal with Sir Edmund Hillary; and to New York, Washington and the White House in the aftermath of 9/11. It includes the thrills and spills of a nursing profession; the excitement of launching a new career as a writer and publisher; the challenges of running a guiding business; and also the story of The Old Mountaineers' Cafe, Bar, Restaurant and Gallery in Aoraki-Mount Cook National Park – the only business ever opened by Sir Edmund Hillary in the village.

It recounts a rip-roaring battle with the Department of Conservation, yet it is also a love story, and an overview of the principles held by a New Zealand family, chief among them the refusal to give up, and how this and other factors helped to make the dream of The Old Mountaineers finally come true.

'It is my hope that this book will keep you turning the pages as you journey with us through some wild adventures that eventually led us to one of the most stunning and special places in New Zealand.

It is also my hope that this story will be a catalyst for New Zealand politicians to create positive changes in policy for the small business person. Policies that will remove onerous levies and restrictions, allow them to compete on a level playing field, without unnecessary obstruction, and give them a fair go.' – MARY HOBBS
